The Day a Spaceship Landed in front of Our School

It was another very boring day at school. My twin-brother and I stared out the window because we hoped that it would stop raining. Our teacher had told us that we would go out if the weather turned nice.

“Hey, the sun’s come out!“, I cried out happily to my brother. “So let’s go out”, said our teacher. We went out and sat down at the benches in front of our school. We were studying some things in maths, but suddenly a big red thing was racing towards us. Quickly we hid under the benches. We saw that the red thing was a really tiny Lego spaceship. Two very small aliens came out of the spaceship. “I knew we had to take the second roundabout, not the first”, said one alien to the other. “This is not the planet Arte, this is planet Earth”, said the other alien. Ignoring us, they went back inside the spaceship, one alien saying: “If we don’t destroy planet Arte within the next 24 hours, we have to watch this horrible TV channel every evening”. Then they flew away.

Every kid who had seen these weird two aliens had to promise the teachers that they would not tell anyone. Otherwise people would think that they had gone crazy. When we came home from school, we looked if the TV channel Arte still existed but we couldn’t find it in our TV list anymore.
